THURSDAY evening, with its accompanying snowflakes, brought a real old-fashioned picture-book Christmas Eve, and, to judge from the hurrying throngs of late shoppers, the shop-early crusade appeared to be merely the dream of an idealist. Buxily seeking for just "that" right little gift were Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer, the latter looking very snug in a huge enveloping coat of chinchilla fur, with a deep rolling collar of seal. With this the matron wore a small toque of sable, trimmed with a brown bird of paradise, and carried a muff of chinchilla.

Mrs. Antonio Yamaga Stewart and her small daughter were among the shoppers. Mrs. Stewart wearing a good-looking trottier of bottle-green broadcloth, with a collar of mink. Her wide-brimmed hat was of green velvet, with a band of mink around the crown. Her small daughter was also clad in dark-green and wore a small close-fitting cap of leopard skin. Miss Kitty Bryant was noticed wearing a three-quarter-length coat of saalakin over a frock of cinnamon brown cloth. Her hat was of black velvet, small and close-fitting.

The shops are putting forth their most supreme effort in apparel for evening wear, for with the many functions which crowd the evening hours madame needs many gowns.

An attractive evening dress of blue charmeuse is worn by Mrs. Thomas Dunn.

The skirt is unusually simple and plain and has an overdress of satin which reaches to the knees. The bodice is cut in a V in the front and back and crystal trimmings outline the décolletage.

Mrs. William B. Lloyd wears a beautiful gown of white chiffon satin, made with a pointed train. The bodice has black velvet, draped from one shoulder and caught over the hip with a silver ornament. Silver lace veils the velvet and is also used on the skirt. The shoulder bands are formed of silver ornaments.

Mrs. Warner Earnshaw has selected a dress frock of turquoise satin. Silver lace flowers are used on the skirt and folds of tulle soften the décolletage. The bodice is sleeveless and has bands of beautiful greenish blue beads over the shoulders.

A handsome evening gown of black satin is worn by Mrs. William Baird Keiser. The skirt is cut in dancing length and narrow at the foot. Black mullins form an overdress. The bodice is composed of solid jet beads above which sheer lace outlines the décolletage. Marine and jet form the shoulder bands. Long ropes of jet beads are fastened on the shoulders and fall below the waist line. Over this exquisite gown Mrs. Keiser wears a black satin evening wrap, the collar and cuffs of which are made of ermine.
